THE REVOLUTIONARY PSYCHOLOGY OF GAY-CENTEREDNESS IN MEN

THREE SHORT ESSAYS

BY MITCH WALKER, Ph.D.
TABLE OF CONTENTS

Introduction ........................................................................................................3

The Archetype of Gay-Centeredness in Men ..................................................5

The Revolutionary Challenge of Gay-Centered Inner Work .......................11

A Recent Gay-Centered History Lesson .......................................................19

A Note to Lesbians ..........................................................................................26

Biographical Note ..........................................................................................27

© 1999 Mitch Walker
INTRODUCTION

I have written these three short essays to introduce the interested reader to the psychology of archetypal Gay-Centeredness in men and to the place of gay-centered inner work in the unfolding of a new millennium. I hope these meditations on gay liberation and the rise of authentic individuality will inform and inspire you to seek out more.

The discussion is based on a gay-centered Jungian analysis of homosexual orientation, that is, the application of Jungian tools for the advancement of gay psyche and freedom. I have been exploring this approach to homosexuality since 1974, because I have found that harnessing Jung’s basic framework to a gay perspective has yielded uniquely empowering and transformative results toward a further stage of gay liberation with profound consequences for all people. As is possible in Jungian discourse, I have chosen to capitalize the names of archetypes, for example, the Shadow. For those readers not familiar with Jungian concepts, reference to a Jungian primer may prove of some assistance.

In Gay Spirit,

Hollywood, California
New Year’s Day, 1999
THE ARCHETYPE OF
GAY-CENTEREDNESS IN MEN

Today I wish to honor the archetype of Gay-Centeredness in men. This is an inborn pattern of meaning that focuses on homosexuality and its unfolding experience. It is that innate intelligence which fires homosexual lust, desire and romance as key psychological facts of life around which a growing boy and youth can come to know himself and come into his own as what we today would call a gay-identified man.

Gay identity, according to the constructionist viewpoint currently dominating gay intellectuals, is purely a recent situational creation of Western sociopolitical forces. Constructionists say that even the experience of a consistent, central homosexual desire and romance in a person is built that way due primarily to outside forces. They point to people and cultures where they say sexual identity and desire seem different or fluid.

But I would say that the "outside" does not and cannot either create or destroy the inner primordial forces of the unconscious psyche, the inherited archetypes, the source of all psychological energy, patterns and meanings. Therefore I say that when the spirit of loving phallos seizes a gay boy in its inexorable grip, that boy is fundamentally not experiencing any external force or context but rather an internal Will and Purpose which has chosen him, to be its follower, to be his inner God and Way, Homodeity as god of the libido, the "energy" of the psyche, of Phallos and Eros, of Romantic Love, of the Great Mystery of Meaning, of Self-realization.

This is the archetype of Gay-Centeredness, of a homosexual Lord of Love and Knowledge and Self and Being and Becoming, of a centralizing homosexual lust and love as the bursting kundalini energy rising from the fundament to sprout Enlightenment in the mind.
This is the Being to whom we — each one of us who become gay-identified — have turned in eager longing as we experience the fact of homosexual desire and love, even of life itself, upwelling from our deepest core to inexorably inundate us in his Call.

This Call is even there from before the beginning, informing and orienting the first stirrings of psychological life. It reaches its first great climax when a young gay boy of three or four, under a growingly insistent yearning to get physically close to older males, unselfconsciously falls into romantic love — the First True Love — for his father (or analogous figure). Our father’s image becomes the first personification of Homodeity in the core unfolding of archetypal romance, Homoprogenitor as ultimate love-object. Arousal of such a primordial incestuous longing brings in turn the awakening of the also-innate incest taboo with its primal shame, and so the First Love is then repressed back into the unconscious, where it will magically give birth to a second Son of the Homosexual Father, an inner gay soul figure, an archetypal Twin Brother.

At the same time, falling in love with father means experiencing mother both as erotic role model and as rival (the boy would like to take her place with father). This then reflects a homosexual form of relationship with the inner archetypal feminine, in Jungian terms the Anima. I call this Homosexual Anima Aphrodite Urania (after Plato’s Symposium), while the Homosexual Father I call Uranian Eros, and the Twin Brother I call the Double Soul. These three figures plus the developing ego of a gay boy constitute a magic homosexual Quaternity constellated from primordial libido by the Will of Homodeity, an inner archetypal Gay Family from which a homosexual individuation of personality can go forward. It is a gay way of coming to terms with our parents and our inner selves. Such a dynamic — parallel to the Oedipal experience of heterosexual boys — I call the Uranian complex. The constellation and ultimate resolution of this archetypally-engendered Uranian complex provides the motoric engine by which gay life and creativity can fulfill themselves.

When we fall in love with Uranian Eros and seek him out as Father and Brother, we enter a fecund homosexual Twinship with the Sacred not experienced by those heterosexually organized, we enter the magnetic Romance of the transpersonal Double, the seminal Haunting of our Wraith-Buddy Soul. We enter a homosexual search for the ultimate meaning of life through mystic marriage with the animating spirit in our own penis, Phallos Protos, the eternal Source of Fathering, during which we experience a special bond and identification with Aphrodite Urania as Mother and Sister that reverses our biological gender; thus we become hermaphroditic and mercurial and gravid in the pursuit of gay love. Primordial Homodeity splits into a "king" half and a "queen" half to give birth to himself out of his own origin in more evolved thus "royal" form. Such a procreative gynandrous Twinship with the Sacred both invokes a homosexual form of incestuous return to the Primal Scene of creation as it evokes the archetypes of Androgyne, Trickster, Transformer and Friend of God. Thereby we learn the alchemical teachings of Sophia — the Wisdom — of homosexual love’s spermatic mysterium as the Regal Way of Self-realization, from which comes the birth of spiritual insight and initiation. In this “Third-gender” way we are following the footsteps of our most ancient homosexual forebears, who evolved at the dawn of humanity to personify the roles of seeker and knower, philosopher, scientist and mystic. Thereby the archetype of Gay-Centeredness developed avatars of the mind and spirit, focusing in their own personhood the evolutionary force of energetic libido’s progressive transformation from concretistic life and reproduction to the generative flowering of mental being and individual self-awareness. The products of this royal process, as Plato notes in his Symposium, are the magical “children” of homosexual love and self-development, and this same archetypal truth animates our homo spirit today. And more so than ever today, the dysfunctional society of heterosexual breeders around us needs the necessary balancing, healing and evolving capacities of our mercurial Love.

When we claim a gay identity we are acknowledging and validating the eternal archetype of Gay-Centeredness under modern sociopolitical conditions and needs. It provides us a sure sense of self rooted in the very core of our authenticity, our heart's soul, that can stand up for the adamantine truth of our love and being against homophobia as we develop modern forms of gay-centered thought to celebrate and further actualize our archetypal homo potentials. Gay-centered thought arises with gay identity as a natural extension of archetypal Homodeity into consciousness, by which questions of existence, becoming and meaning can be explored from a homosexual perspective and spirit, as can be found in writings from before Plato to Walt Whitman and Karl Ulrichs—"fathers" of modern gay liberation in the 19th century—to Edward Carpenter and Harry Hay more recently. The next step in developing modern gay identity, then, is when gay-centered thought turns on itself, that is, to seek conscious relationship directly with the inner archetypal homocenter through self-knowing.

Most thought by gay men today is not very gay-centered, much less self-knowing. This, unfortunately, is the direct result of one thousand years of brutal Christian persecution, which has severely disrupted our ancient gay wisdom traditions as it has crippled our psyches with crushing shame and woundedness.

Yet the eternal archetype of Gay-Centeredness contains an infinite Source of healing and inspiration, and we who today achieve a functioning gay identity have established the necessary inner foundation to now renew and advance our most hallowed homo traditions.

We are today Called to re-establish paths of homo self-knowing in gay-centered thought to reawaken our deepest nature and potentials as we heal our inner woundedness, a practical psychology of gay-centeredness. This will entail a full encounter with the dark problems of our own psyche, what Jungians call the Shadow, as the initiatory doorway to a fuller gay truth. Centralizing homosexual desire will take us there as it pulls us back to the primordial incestuous family in the Uranian complex, to its Shadow-side of Shameful Hurt Child, Rejecting Father and Engulfing Mother. When we consciously seek relationship to our own gay psychology we initiate a historically new stage in modern gay liberation, a second phase of gay identity formation that I call coming out inside. Through learning inner work we learn to partner and unfold our deepest homo psychology, which leads not only to our Origin but also to our Final Outcome.

This would be a profoundly revolutionary step, because the adult human personality today is maintained by a persecutory and self-destructive repression of the Shadow. Historically determined by cumulative social forces, this inflated tyrannical repression is enforced in the individual through vicious unconscious defenses in collusion with other people’s defenses in a vast consumerist system, a modern version of tribalistic group-mindedness spinning out a smothering web of violent collective and self delusion. Since we are all raised to be thoroughly enmeshed in it, to break the arrogant stranglehold of this enwebbing delusion in oneself is in my experience the greatest challenge a person today can face. Yet the initiatory potential, capacity and understanding to do so is also resident within the infinite Source of archetypal Gay-Centeredness, in its personification as the figure of mystical shamanic transformation; historic examples would include the Greek/chemical Mercurius (or Orpheus, Bacchus, Apollo etc.), Egyptian Thoth, Sumerian Enki, Aztec Tezcatlipoca, Tibetan Manjusri, as well as their female counterparts such as Sophia (or Metis, Diotima etc.), Maat (or Isis etc.), Innana, Tara and so on.

Yet today we are in need not of metaphysical initiation but of psychological. The problem can no longer be displaced onto our projections, because it consists of a profound lack of psychological self-awareness, awareness of our own inner unconscious psychodynamics of repression and other defenses and the destructive issues they are hiding. These issues must be faced to truly resolve internalized homophobia and reach a deeper relationship with the underlying archetypes, and so the Call of archetypal Gay-Centeredness once we have achieved a relatively solid gay identity is to come out inside, to birth a new gay identity based on conscious partnership with our own gay psyche.

Since humanity is currently in desperate need of liberation from repressive forms of society and personality, to embark on gay-centered inner work therefore is to enter a new avant-garde, to become a new kind of queer political revolutionary. It is the revolution of Selfhood and the true democracy of all selves, which after all we began to serve as soon as Homodeity seized us in the core of our own being. For then we gained that equalizing Twinship with the Sacred which is the transpersonal origin of democratic visions, and further we were forced to stand up for that inner source of truth in the face of rapacious heterosexism. In doing so we established the basis to now step into that royal universe of individuality which the archetype of Gay-Centeredness has homosexually birthed in us through incestuous congress with our own primordial origins. To do so is to further differentiate a conscious and psychological relationship with that cosmogonic Force in us, seminal Uranian Eros, with Phanes — the Orphic “Lightbringer,” with Aeon — “He Who Turns the Zodiac,” with Legba — the Yoruban Vodou “Master of the Starry Road,” with the Intelligence of Homosexual Phallos as the personification of sexual instinct and the energy-system of the mind.

After all, as Diotima asks Socrates at the climax of her teaching (as related in the Symposium), following this way means “to become the friend of God and be immortal, if mortal man may. Would that be an ignoble life?”